A Hundred Years From Now-Tommy Collins
Author:Tommy Collins, Jack Rhodes, Dick Reynolds

Intro:

C                              G7                  C
What difference will it make a hundred years from now

                                                  G7
I know it's all over soon you'll tell me goodbye
                                                   F          C
But I won't cry on your shoulder and I'll never ask why
                                                  C7          F
That's the way the old bell rings I'll forget you somehow
                         C      G7                  C
What difference will it make a hundred years from now

  G7                                                C
A hundred years from now we'll be in another world
     D7                              G7
What difference could it make if one day I lost my girl
C                           C7              F
If I lose you tomorrow or if I lose you now
                         C      G7                  C
What difference will it make a hundred years from now

                                                   G7
I'll daydream no longer I'd be fooling my heart
                                F              C
Why promise it you dear when I know we must part
                           C7                  F
I've lost you forever but I'll get by somehow
                         C      G7                  C
What difference will it make a hundred years from now

  G7                                                  C
A hundred years from now you won't be a memory to me
  D7                       G7
I won't recall loving you it's only today's misery
C                          C7              F
If I lose you tomorrow or if I lose you now
                         C      G7                  C
What difference will it make a hundred years from now
