G                    C          D7                    G
They married back in forty-two  they were young and love was new
    Em            C             D7
And every day the feeling grew  between the two of them
G                    C
When work grew scarce and times got bad
    D7               G
The hope would chase away the sad
    Em                C             D7                 G
And hope was sometimes all they had  between the two of them

                         C               D7              G
The fifties came and the sixties went  a mortgage note replaced the rent
    Em                    C               D7
And they made the most of each day spent  between the two of them
G                        C              D7             G
The children all turned out just fine  he retired in eighty-nine
     Em                 C     D7                   G
Left with oh so little time  between the two of them

                    C                    D7            G
Today I braved the graveyard rain  and placed a rose between their names
    Em                   C          D7
But that's the most that ever came  between the two of them
G                    C             D7                    G
And oh I miss them both so much  his crooked smile her gentle touch
    Em                   C           D7                   G
And the pleasures of just growing up  between the two of them

                C             D7                     G
Oh I miss them both so much  his crooked smile her gentle touch
    Em                   C            D7                  G
And the pleasures of just growing up  between the two of them
