The Highest Bidder-Hank Snow
Author:Mary Jean Shurtz, Boudleaux Bryant, Hank Snow

```
C                                          F
You put your heart upon an auction block and sold it
       G7                              C
Selfish greed and envy were the auctioneers
G7          C                            F
The highest bidder won your heart but he can't hold it
            G7                           C
Love that's bought with gold can only end in tears

            G7                             C
The price I offered was my true love and devotion
       D7                                   G7
But you laughed and said that love had had its day
            C                               F
When at your feet I laid a heart filled with emotion
     G7                                 C
You scorned the only price that I could pay

                                         F
May the golden price he paid you for your love dear
        G7                              C
Keep you with him may you never drift apart
G7          C                           F
Cause at the auction of regret all tears are worthless
        G7                              C
Bids are low for second-handed broken hearts

              G7                                  C
When all your wealth and riches cease to give you pleasure
        D7                                  G7
When you tire of playing princess you'll recall
         C                                  F
That love alone is life's true everlasting treasure
       G7                               C
And my bid it was the highest after all
