You Don't Have The Nerve-Hank Thompson
Author:Billy Gray and Hank Thompson

```
G                                  C
Within your heart you shelter the shame that you deserve
D7                                                    G
You can't look me in the eye cause you don't have the nerve
Your new love's out of kilter you saw your dream world swerve
D7                                                     G
You should take the blame alone but you don't have the nerve

C                 D7                                  G
Don't blame fate because you hate the one that proved untrue
C                    G              A7              D7
Just pay the price and sacrifice the way I did for you
G                                   C
Your shebang has boomeranged cause he threw you a curve
         D7                                                          G
For the life you spent you should repent but you don't have the nerve

You know you heart's unstable for you there's no reserve
D7                                                    G
You'd like to say I'm sorry but you don't have the nerve
The cards are on the table the truth we can observe
D7                                                     G
You'd like to ask me to forgive but you don't have the nerve

C                    D7                               G
Because you knew I worshiped you  you left me all alone
C                    G                  A7                        D7
And now you pine because you find when you come back I'm gone
G                                              C
Today you felt you whole world melt your dreams just won't conserve
    D7                                                          G
The love you've lost so pay the cost when you don't have the nerve
